Mr. Williams has had a near 3 month history of a sensation of an irregular heartbeat / awareness of his heart beat. This began at the end of last year during a stressful work period, he went on holiday to Argentina for a month where things settled somewhat but did not disappear. He has been back in the UK for a couple of months and is getting almost daily symptoms especially towards the end of the day rather than normally at night although he has had some instances of this. He does not have chest pain or significant shortness of breath. He does regular exercise and these symptoms do not appear limiting or worsened with exercise. He is otherwise well and not on any regular medications or has a significant heart history.

I saw him today, BP 117/74, p72, HR sounded to miss a beat every 3rd beat but no murmurs heard. An ECG was completed today showing regular sinus rhythm, copy given to him.

I have advised a Cardiology review for consideration of ECHO / 24hr ECG / full Cardiology assessment of his palpitations and am grateful for your kind review.
